INTRODUCTION & BACKGROUND

[redacted]

Respondent Otto Bock HealthCare North America, Inc. ("Ottobock") disputes the material factual statements in the Motion, including that the merger is likely to substantially lessen competition. [redacted]

Complaint Counsel cites no authority for the proposition that [redacted] is irrelevant to the issue the Commission must prove: likelihood of substantial lessening of competition. Such matters should be decided on full factual development, not on a motion to strike. Indeed, the Motion, labeled as a motion to strike an affirmative defense, in reality seeks partial summary decision on disputed issues of competitive effects on which the Commission bears the burden of proof and Ottobock is entitled to develop and present evidence. Due process requires that Ottobock be permitted to frame its own defense and present pertinent evidence. See Washington v. Texas, 388 U.S. 14, 19 (1967) (the right to present a defense is a fundamental element of due process).

Ottobock disputes the allegations of relevant market, market shares, barriers to entry or expansion, contentions that Freedom was its closest competitor, [redacted], and disputes anticompetitive effects. See Amended Answer and Affirmative Defenses; Jan. 18, 2018 Tr. at 34-50.[2] Preclusion of disputed defenses is inappropriate at this early stage, with fact discovery proceeding and Ottobock's expert reports not due until May 1, 2018. See Impax Labs., Inc., No. 9373 (F.T.C. Oct. 27, 2017) (denying premature motion seeking to limit defenses).

The evidence will establish that Ottobock's acquisition of Freedom does not violate the Clayton Act because the acquisition will not substantially lessen competition. That element of a violation depends on a forward-looking evaluation of overall effects. See United States v. General Dynamics Corp., 415 U.S. 486, 504-05 (1974) (noting that "postacquisition evidence tending to diminish the probability or impact of anticompetitive effects might be considered in a

"Efficiencies and other procompetitive benefits … outweigh any and all proffered anticompetitive effects." Am. Answer at 29.

"The Complaint fails to allege a proper relevant market in which to assess competitive effects …." Id.

"Any presumption of anticompetitive effects is rebutted by numerous factors, including, … the lack of substantial barriers to entry or expansion, the existence of numerous competing manufacturers each with its own research and development programs, the severe price constraints imposed by CMS and private insurers with superior bargaining power, the economic incentive and ability of large distributors and customers to promote products of Ottobock's competitors and new entrants, the severely diminished competitive profile of Freedom … in light of the financial difficulties it faced, and any anticompetitive effects are outweighed by procompetitive effects, efficiencies and synergies, including without limitation, cost savings, quality improvements, expanded consumer choice, and innovation." Id. at 29-30.

"At the time of the acquisition, Freedom … was a failing firm." Id. at 30.

§ 7 case" and that "the essential question remains whether the probability of such future impact [substantial lessening of competition] exists at the time of trial").

There has been no violation of the Clayton Act, and one of the reasons why is that the acquisition—[redacted]—is not likely to result in substantial lessening of competition. That disputed issue is part of the elements of a violation and a potentially dispositive defense.

THE ALJ SHOULD DECIDE THE MOTION

[redacted][3]

Pursuant to Rule 3.22(a), a motion to strike is referred to the Commission, unless the Commission refers it to the ALJ. The ALJ should address the Motion regarding issues that the ALJ identified as going to the heart of the case. In this context, due process dictates that the ALJ, and not the Commission, should decide the Motion. See ABA Antitrust Section Comments to FTC's Proposed Rulemaking, Nov. 6, 2008 (arguing that the Commission deciding motions to

[3] At the scheduling conference, the ALJ questioned counsel on the seventh affirmative defense. Jan. 18, 2018 Tr. at 6-9, Exh. B. The ALJ did not question its adequacy, or suggest that more detailed pleading was required, or that it was deficient as a matter of law. Instead, the ALJ suggested as a practical matter that [redacted] strike "could reduce the quality of decision making, and may color the perception of the fairness and impartiality of Commission proceedings ….").

ARGUMENT

The Motion assumes, without any proof, that the merger was illegal. [redacted] [4] The evidence will show that the acquisition will not substantially lessen competition, inter alia, because Freedom [redacted] The Motion should be denied.

I. Disputed Factual Issues Preclude the Drastic Remedy of a Motion to Strike

Rule 3.22(a) permits motions to strike. See In re 1-800 Contacts, Inc., 2017 WL 511541, *2 (F.T.C. Feb. 1, 2017). However, motions to strike are disfavored because striking a portion of a pleading is a drastic remedy. In re Dynamic Health of Florida, LLC, 2004 WL 3142823, *1 (F.T.C. Nov. 9, 2004); Waste Mgmt. Holdings, Inc. v. Gilmore, 252 F.3d 316, 347 (4th Cir. 2001) (quoting 5A Wright & Miller Fed. Prac. & Procedure § 1380, 647 (2d ed.)). Many courts will grant such motions "only if the portions sought to be stricken are prejudicial or scandalous." Makuch v. F.B.I., No. Civ.A. 99-1094, 2000 WL 915767, at *2 (D.D.C. Jan. 7, 2000). Absent a strong reason for so doing, courts will generally not tamper with pleadings. Nwachukwu v. Karl, 216 F.R.D. 176, 178 (D.D.C. 2003).

Complaint Counsel argues that it styled the Motion "as a motion to strike because it relies solely on the pleadings rather than any identified undisputed material fact." Mot. at 3 n.1. To [4] See Am. Answer at 29 ("The inclusion of any ground within this section [on affirmative defenses] does not constitute an admission that Ottobock bears the burden of proof on each or any of the matters, nor does it excuse the FTC from establishing each element of its purported claim for relief.").

the contrary, the Motion relies not only on material facts disputed in the pleadings, as noted above, but also upon facts outside the pleadings. For example, the Motion asserts that Ottobock fired Freedom's CEO, began moving forward with integration plans, and then slowed those plans. See Mot. at 2. None of these facts—which are disputed—are in the Complaint.[5]

Complaint Counsel cites no case granting a motion to strike relating to [redacted] Complaint Counsel relies on Impax Labs., Inc., No. 9373 (F.T.C. Oct. 27, 2017) and In re 1-800 Contacts, 2017 WL 511541, at *4. Both of these cases addressed motions for summary decision. Neither was a merger case. In 1-800 Contacts, because the complaint challenged only private conduct not subject to Noerr-Pennington protection, certain defenses were stricken. In contrast, [redacted] go to the heart of factual analysis of whether the acquisition will substantially lessen competition, a disputed element of a violation.

In Impax Laboratories, the Commission refused to grant a motion for summary decision precluding defenses, which was prematurely brought before the parties had completed discovery and fully articulated their positions. See Impax Labs., Inc., No. 9373 at 2. Similarly, there are many facts in dispute at the heart of this action, including whether the acquisition [redacted] is likely to substantially lessen competition. Furthermore, the discovery period runs until April 6, 2018, and Ottobock expert reports are not due until May 1, 2018.

The Motion argues that the defense fails the Twombly/Iqbal pleading standard. However, [redacted] is pertinent to issues on which the Commission bears the burden of proof, and the federal appellate courts have not addressed whether heightened pleading requirements apply to affirmative defenses, with federal district courts divided on that issue. See 5 Wright & Miller Fed. Prac. & Procedure: Civil 3d § 1274 (3d ed.). Moreover, as noted by the ALJ and the cases cited above, [redacted] goes to the heart of the Complaint. See pp. 1-3 above. On February 21, 2018, [redacted][6] To the extent more artful pleading or additional facts surrounding the [redacted] are required, Ottobock requests leave to amend.

[5] Complaint Counsel made these arguments after it deposed Ottobock's designee on integration. [redacted]

II. [redacted] Is Pertinent to Analysis of Competitive Effects, Which the Commission Must Prove As Part of Its Case

The Motion should be denied because it is premised on, and assumes, material facts which are in dispute regarding whether Ottobock's acquisition will substantially lessen competition. See, e.g., Am. Answer at 1-2, 29-30; ¶¶ 17, 31, 39, 59, 62. The acquisition will not substantially lessen competition, inter alia, because [redacted]

On September 22, 2017, Ottobock acquired Freedom. Within a week, Ottobock received inquiries from the FTC. In light of the FTC investigation, Ottobock [redacted]

CONCLUSION

The Motion should be referred to the ALJ for decision and should be denied. If any more artful pleading or further details on [redacted] are required, Ottobock requests leave to amend.
