

The changes proposed will have even more of a negative effect on our business. This business is not a get-rich-quick scheme but is designed to be built fast. People being mentored by our team have been building to the level of Platinum in seven or less months because of the trust and proof that the business works. By causing the new prospect to wait seven days will most likely lengthen the process and increase the time it can take to become successful by 3 or even 5 times. Seven months can then turn into almost three years.

There is plenty of information about our business on the internet and available upon request from public sources. If this is to be in acted then you should be fair with all companies, MLM or not.

If all businesses are to make employees wait at least seven days and must provide their new employee/prospect with stacks of information about their company from a disgruntled employee or IBO that could not dedicate enough time to build a business. These people will say negative about the business through law suits, you will begin to see businesses around the US become bankrupt because of high wages to compensate risk, or non sponsorship and possibly affect the financial futures of hundreds of thousands of people.

This act is not logical because everything in life is a choice, Quixtar, a job or even a marriage. Maybe the courts should supply couples with divorce rates and law suit information from divorced couples before people can marry? Does that make sense to you?

People are already offered a six month return on their investment of getting started. We applaud making an educated decision; however we must be fair across the board with information. If one company must do this because it is a choice, then all things in life that are choices must be regulated with an overabundance of information.
