

Julie Bursey

7/1/06

Dear Sir or Madam:

I am writing this letter because I am concerned about the proposed Business Opportunity Rule R511993. I believe that in its present form, it could prevent me from continuing as a Xango DISTRIBUTOR. I understand that part of the FTC's responsibilities is to protect the public from "unfair and deceptive acts or practices," yet some of the sections in the proposed rule will make it very difficult, if not impossible, for me to sell Xango mangosteen juice.

I have been a Xango Distributor for 6 months. Originally, I became a DISTRIBUTOR, in my company because I felt the product was exceptional and I wanted to earn some additional income. I wanted to supplement my earnings for retirement. I believe that the 7 day waiting period to enroll new distributors is business prohibitive. It is the most confusing and burdensome sections of the proposed rule. Xango's sales kit only costs $35. People buy TVs, cars, and other items that cost much more and they do not have to wait seven days. This waiting period gives the impression that there might be something wrong with the company or the compensation plan. I also think this seven-day waiting period is unnecessary. Xango already has a 30 day money-back guarantee. Under this waiting period requirement, I will need to keep very detailed records when I first speak to someone about Xango, and will then need to send in many reports to my company headquarters. The paperwork will become labor intensive.

The proposed rule also calls for the release of any information regarding lawsuits involving misrepresentation, or unfair or deceptive practices. It does not matter if the company was found innocent. Today, anyone or any company can be sued for almost anything. It does not make sense to me that I would have to disclose these lawsuits unless Xango is found guilty. Otherwise, Xango and I are put at an unfair advantage even though Xango has done nothing wrong.

Finally, the proposed rule requires the disclosure of a minimum of 10 prior purchasers nearest to the prospective purchaser. I am glad to provide references, but in this day of identity theft, I am very uncomfortable giving out the personal information of individuals (without their approval) to strangers. Also, giving away this information could damage the business relationship of the references who may be involved in other companies or businesses including those of competitors. In order to get the list of the 10 prior purchasers, I will need to send the address of the prospective purchaser to Xango headquarters and then wait for the list. I also think the following sentence required by the proposed rule will prevent many people from wanting to sign up as a salesperson - "If you buy a business opportunity from the seller, your contact information can be disclosed in the future to other buyers." People are very concerned about their privacy and identity theft. They will be reluctant to share their personal information with individuals they may have never met.

I appreciate the work that the FTC does to protect consumers, yet I believe this proposed new rule has many unintended consequences and there are less burdensome alternatives available to achieving your goals for protecting the consumer. Today with the internet people have become more educated and more cautious as well. I do not believe that the FTC completely understands the constraints it will place on home based business success.

Thank you for your time in considering my comments.

Respectfully,

Julie A. Bursey