

Dear Federal Trade Commission,

My name is Lissette Maldonado and I am a current IBO, apart of Quixtar. The reason for my letter is to tell my view of the proposal rule. I would like to start off by saying that Quixtar is a first class company. Quixtar provides people with proper facts about the business, such as sources and companies that are affiliated with it. There are many known partner stores that are apart of Quixtar that have done their dudiligence to be apart of this company.

It shouldn't take a professional seven day to evaluate this business, especially for such a small investment. Our business has a six month one hundred percent money back guarantee which allows a new IBO the freedom to decide whether this business is for them. The ten contacts in the area are not fair to the current business owners. I don't think IBO's that get registered would like random people calling them. Different people build this business differently and have different paces and feelings about it. People who don't do the work and expect results put blame on other people and business, which, in turn will talk bad about the business. As a business owner, I don't want new people to be basing their decision based on someone else's feedback but their own. Nothing in this life comes for free. I am glad that this business takes work to make an extra one hundred and fifty thousand dollars a year in a two to five year plan, not a two to five day plan. This is what makes this business credible.

I understand that the Federal Trade Commission is getting things accomplished to eliminate scams and frauds in business, but some of your propositions are going to hurt the real businesses out their enhancing free enterprise in this country.

Thank you very much for your time

Lissette C. Maldonado
