

Dear Sirs,

My wife and I have associated with the Alticor family of companies, currently Quixtar, since 1970. Our entire business career has been dedicated to developing business using this business model. Our experience had been very positive and our ability to help others has been rewarding.

Ethical business practices have always been the Quixtar priority. Helping others grow and protecting their rights are constant considerations. Our goal is to equip new friends with all the information to make an informed decision concerning starting their business. Quixtar has many rules and requirements that we follow carefully during the start up process. Our business model is designed to create a stable long term income not “overnight success.” Every financial decision that a new IBO (Independent Business Owner) makes is completely refundable so they are only risking a little time and effort. Many prospective IBOs do not join us because we are careful to explain to them that success requires personal commitment and lots of hard work.

The Quixtar organization is very strict with its discipline of “rule breakers” and does not allow IBOs to abuse the business opportunity. Additional FTC rules are unnecessary, would create an undue burden, present difficulty for all IBOs, and would not enhance or protect anyone’s business experience.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Bob Andrews
