Subject: Direct RevenueNo, it's not enough.....

There is almost no amount of money which you can fine the low life scum who have run Direct Revenue over the last few years. The fine is a slap in the face of reality. Anyone who has ever done any research knows this amount, which is even worse than the other FTC absurdity, the Zango\180Solutions fine, is a joke.

If the company is dead and no longer producing software, you need to track down the low life's who evaded prosecution on whatever off shore island they are on currently enjoying the ill gotten gains and take it as it's a result of the unethical, disturbing and down right greedy tactics.

This does nothing to discourage other companies from doing likewise. Do the math. No, wait, don't do the math.....you guys don't have very good mathematicians there.

When is the FTC going to actually make a real statement and clobber one of these companies out of existence? Obviously, these fines are not the answer. Not in these amounts anyway.
