Subject: 4(c) documents

If the Acquired Person provides what is probably 4(c) documents on their side to the Acquiring Person (and is seen by officers and directors of the Acquiring Person) after the transaction document has been executed and thus was not used to analyze or evaluate the transaction (i.e., the decision to go ahead with the transaction was clearly not based at all on such documents), must the Acquiring Person include them as part of its 4(c) documents as well? Let me know. Thanks as always.
